Please provide your comments regarding the appropriateness of different sections of the manuscript.	After a careful analysis, there looks to be an issue related to the title and the interpretation provided by the author. In my opinion, the patient had no femur fracture at the initial presentation- XRays displayed in Fig. 1 and 2 show no fracture. He presented again later on with local pain and deformity, but there is a note regarding a trauma the patient had at home before the last visit. It is possible that the fracture occurred at that moment? And not before the initial presentation? So, it is possible not to have a missed femur fracture, but a fracture that occurred at some point after the initial presentation.
